ST. JAMES CATHEDRAL

May 31, 2015

Dear Friends,

In January, when Dr. James Savage retired from his position as Cathedral Music Director, we began the search for a new director. Five months later, and after a great deal of effort that involved long hours of work by a search committee as well as by the members of the Cathedral Choir and the Women of St. James Schola, I am happy to announce to you that Dr. Paul Thornock, Director of Music at St. Joseph Cathedral in Columbus, Ohio, for the past sixteen years, is our new Director of Music. Paul will take over his responsibilities on July 20.

The decision was not an easy one. There were fifty applicants for the position and they came, not only from across the country but from across the world. As you might expect, the decision came only after a great deal of prayer, soul-searching, and intense conversation.

Even though Paul has served in Columbus, Ohio, for quite a few years, his roots are here in the Pacific Northwest. He was born and raised in the Shelton area and graduated from the University of Puget Sound in Tacoma. Following that, he pursued graduate studies at the University of Notre Dame and later completed his doctoral work at the University of Cincinnati College-Conservatory of Music. Over the years, he has gained an excellent and enviable reputation as organist, choral conductor, and church musician.

In announcing Paul's appointment, I want to take this opportunity to express my deepest gratitude to Joseph Adam, senior Cathedral organist since 1992, who has served these past five months as interim Director of Music. But "served" doesn't begin to say it. Joseph has done an absolutely superb job during this time of transition. He has overseen the music department very capably, given excellent musical leadership to the Cathedral Choir and Women's Schola, and been warmly and pastorally present to each member of those ensembles -- all the while continuing his outstanding work as Cathedral Organist. Not least of all, he helped to make this year's celebrations of Holy Week and the Triduum both beautiful and prayerful.

No words of mine can adequately express my appreciation to Joseph for all that he has done. He is the ultimate team-player and these past few months are just one more impressive chapter in his long service to St. James Cathedral. I am happy to share with you that Joseph will continue as Cathedral Organist and that I have asked him to assume additional responsibilities as Associate Director of Music.

I want to thank each of you for your prayers during these past months and I would ask for your continued prayers as Joseph completes his work as interim director and Paul prepares to move his family across country in mid-July. Transitions can be challenging; only prayer, planning, and a positive spirit can make them smooth. I am excited about the future and convinced that, under Paul Thornock's musical leadership, the future of the music program at St. James Cathedral will be every bit as bright as its past!

Corpus Christi Procession

with the Blessed Sacrament on the Solemnity of the Most Holy Body and Blood of Christ

Sunday, June 7, 2015
10:00am Mass

The traditional procession for Corpus Christi, the Solemnity of the Most Holy Body and Blood of Christ, will take place immediately following the 10:00am Mass, with prayer and song. Walking with the Lord, we express our faith in the real presence of Christ in the sacrament of his Body and Blood, and we bring that faith to the streets of our city in joyful witness. The procession concludes on Terry Avenue with Benediction of the Blessed Sacrament.

Pope Francis said in his homily for Corpus Christi last year: "the food that really nourishes us and satiates us is only that which the Lord gives us! The food the Lord offers us is different from all others, and perhaps it does not seem as tasty as certain foods which the world offers us. We dream of other meals, as the Jews did in the desert, who mourned for the meat and the onions they ate in Egypt, but they forgot that they ate these meals at the table of slavery... Today, each one of us can ask ourselves: and I? Where do I want to eat? At what table do I want to nourish myself? At the Lord's table? Or do I dream of eating tasty foods, but in slavery? Moreover, each one of us can ask ourselves: what is my memory? That of the Lord who saves me, or that of the garlic and onions of slavery? With what memory do I satiate my soul?"

PART 25: NAILS FROM OLD SACRED HEART CHURCH

31 MAY 2015

Almost all that remains of the first Sacred Heart Church are two “sixteen-penny” iron nails taken from the smoking ruins of the church after it was destroyed by arson fire in the early hours of March 19, 1899. They have been carefully preserved for more than a century.

Sacred Heart of Jesus parish was established in 1889. It is the oldest parish community in Seattle still in existence. For more than twenty years, Father Prefontaine’s Our Lady of Good Help Church had been the only parish in the city. But the population was growing rapidly, and Father Prefontaine suggested to Bishop Aegidius Junger that it was time for Seattle to have another church. But when the Bishop followed his advice, Father Prefontaine was not happy. The presence of another parish and another pastor relieved some of the burden on him, but it also cut out a portion of his parish community. His letter of complaint to Bishop Junger does not survive, but the Bishop’s reply—written in the imperfect English of a native German speaker—still exists: “It is not my intention to do anything that would injure something else.... In regard to the building of a new church in Seattle I have acted in accordance with your own saying.” In this instance, the mild-mannered Bishop Junger was determined. He instructed Father Prefontaine to assist Father Demanez in acquiring a property “between the hospital and Belltown on Unionlake.” The Bishop graciously invited Father Prefontaine to draw the boundaries for the new parish.

Construction soon began at Sixth Avenue and Bell Street. Bishop Junger laid the cornerstone in June of 1889, just days after the great Seattle fire of June 6, 1889. Many salvaged materials from Seattle’s destroyed buildings found their way into the new church, which opened in time for Christmas.

The new parish was saddled with an enormous debt of $16,000, and Father Demanez, overwhelmed at the prospect of repaying it, resigned. The Redemptorist priests took the parish over in 1890. Through their regular missions, special devotions, and attention to fine liturgical music, the parish began to thrive. At Christmas, 1896, a 24-voice choir sang Haydn’s Imperial Mass, complete with orchestra and organ!

But the church building was to be short-lived. On Sunday, March 19, 1899, a policeman on his beat in the neighborhood saw flames leaping from the roof of the building at about 3:00am. The nearby Battery Street Engine House responded immediately, but it was already too late to save the church. The Seattle P-I described the scene in dramatic fashion: “After the church was abandoned to its fate, the conflagration became a grand sight and attracted a crowd of 1,000 or 1,500 from all over the city. After the roof fell in the dry wood work of the interior blazed up sending a column of smoke and fire hundreds of feet into the heavens, paling the stars and making it as light as day for a mile around on every side. The belfry on the front east end of the church was the last thing to go. It stood tall and black against a background of fire until 4:30 o’clock. Gradually the flames lapped away the interior of the tower. The smaller of the two bells, weighing about one half ton, was loosened from its support and fell with a loud crash upon the larger, which, swaying under the shock, tolled loudly its own funeral knell. Then it, too, plunged down into the ruins, a dead weight of 1,700 pounds.” The telegram Father Brown sent to Bishop O’Dea in Vancouver said much the same in far fewer words: “Church entirely and house partly burned 3 am.”

From the beginning, it was clear that the fire was the work of an arsonist. The fire department speculated that the fire had been started in the sanctuary, possibly several hours earlier. A reward of $250 was offered. Witnesses reported seeing two men in a horse-drawn buggy parked near the church earlier in the night. In the end, the perpetrator was never identified.

While the ruins were still smoldering, the priests prepared for Sunday morning Masses in the adjacent school building. On Tuesday of the same week, the parish came together to plan the building of a new church. By summer, the cornerstone was laid, and Bishop O’Dea dedicated the new building on July 8, 1900.

The second Sacred Heart Church was destined for a dramatic end as well—but that is a story for our next issue.

A Presentation by Seattle author John McCoy from A Still and Quiet Conscience, a new biography of Archbishop Raymond Hunthausen, followed by Q&A and Book Signing

Archbishop Raymond G. Hunthausen, archbishop of Seattle from 1975-1991, was the quintessential “Vatican II bishop.” Embracing the spirit of renewal, he was famous for reaching out to the laity, women, and those on the margins. A courageous witness for peace, he earned national attention when he became the first American bishop to urge tax resistance as a protest against preparations for nuclear war. In doing so, he ran against the Cold War policies of the Reagan Administration. But he also came into conflict with desires in the Vatican to reshape the American episcopacy. This biography not only recounts a critical turning point for the American Catholic church; it rekindles the vision of a more inclusive, prophetic, and compassionate church as the “people of God.”—Orbis

JOHN MCCOY first followed this story as a reporter for the Seattle P-I.
